Review: Explains what the party means by "democratic reform." States that this movement tries to eliminate the feudalistic elements among the bourgeoisie, purify the labor ranks, democratize management, eliminate the "contract labor" system, and strengthen the unity of the urban working class to enable it to guide the rural peasant class to achieve the new democracy and socialism. Contends that this movement is a process to strengthen the political authority of the democratic forces and to create favorable conditions for labor and economic reconstruction. Shows how Chinese Communist Party propaganda relates political propaganda to economic reconstruction.
